

Hospital Basement Excavation, AAIS Corporation, CT

In Sept, 2007, AAIS Corporation of West Haven, Connecticut, specializing in asbestos abatement and selective demolition, was awarded an excavation contract at Norwalk Connecticut Hospital. The contract called for approximately 500 cubic yards of fill material to be removed in the basement of the hospital to make room for a new laboratory.

A provision of the contract stated the hospital would stay in full operation during the excavation. The implications of this provision would mean no diesel powered excavators would be allowed on the hospital campus. The job would have to be completed using hand excavation.

Joe Villano, foreman at AAIS Corporation, knew hand excavation would mean slower productivity. Being the forward thinking foreman that he is, Joe saw the Brokk as a potential solution to avoiding diesel fumes and still getting the productivity only a machine could provide. AAIS Corporation agreed with Joe and ordered a Brokk 180 with a 24" loader bucket to the job site. The basement of the hospital was easily excavated using the loader bucket attached to the Brokk 180. The excavated soil was then placed in hand carts which was then easily transported through occupied areas of the hospital outside where it was transported off site. In about two months time, AAIS Corporation completed the job making room for a new research lab at the hospital. AAIS Corporation soon there after invested in the new Brokk 50; a good indication of their experience and thoughts of the performance of their Brokk machine.

The name Brokk has been taken from the mythical figure Brokk, who forged a hammer for Thor, the god of war, in the realm of the Norse gods. Brokk was small but very strong, just like our machines
